- Sorption extraction of platinum group metals from electrolyte used in gold electric fining process.....170

Scientists from St. Petersburg and Kasimov (Ryazan region) have explored a possibility to extract platinum group metals from a used electrolyte after having deposited gold through ionite-based sorption. It is discovered that an ionite with thiourea functional groups S920 may be used for extraction of palladium, platinum, iridium and gold residue out of mother waters after having deposited gold out of electrolyte used in gold electric fining process. However, the use of this ionite does not ensure satisfactory rhodium extraction.
